The Building Process

Choosing a Builder or Remodeler

The choice of a builder is likely the most important decision in the custom homebuilding or remodeling process. Choosing a builder early in the process - can set the stage for successful experience.

Choosing a builder early on is a good idea because the process is so complex that most owners need professional guidance from the beginning to avoid mistakes in site selection, home design and written specifications. Your budget probably shouldn't be among the top criteria in selecting a builder. No builder can quote an accurate price for a custom or semi-custom home until he or she knows the type, style, finishes and features of a home, the site conditions and the type of contract you want to use for construction. Rather than focusing on cost, you may want to base your decision on the builder's competence, reputation, professionalism, warranty coverage and experience. Here is some criteria consider.

Contractor Selection Points

- Check with the contractor's subcontractors and are they reputable.

- Does the contractor carry a Dwelling Contractor Qualifier certification (DCQ) and a Dwelling Contractor certification (DC) from the State of Wisconsin? Ask to see their card and check to see if it is current.
- All Agreements should be in writing. If you have any questions or don't understand something ask before you sign.
- Get more than one quote and question the differences.
- Warranty - what is their warranty and will they provide it in writing.

- Remember, you may never do this again, so take the time to do it right this time.
- Don't let price be the only factor you consider.
- Don't try to rush a contractor into getting your estimate together. Allow the necessary time to get through the process. It will help avoid unpleasant surprises later.
- Don't have unreasonable schedules in mind. Allow for reasonable amounts of time for quality workmanship.
- Don't be disappointed if a project is not done on schedule. Contractors cannot control the weather and most jobs have changes and
